Monasticism and Religious Identities in Tibet:

Yogic Cultures and Study Curricula in the Long 15th Century

This workshop will explore the complex historical landscape of Tibet during the extended 15th century, focusing on the emergence and development of religious identities as a key historical factor during this period. In particular, it will aim at exploring textual compendia and religious narratives, the organisation of educational curricula, and how yogic cultures have systematized meditative practices and engaged in scholarly activities. By weaving together these threads of inquiry, the workshop will offer fresh insights into the interplay between religious identities, monasticism, and contemplative traditions.
